

Abstract of the Disclosure

This invention relates to a turbine type motor having at least two rotating disc, mounted, housed, and geared together so that one rotates transverse to the other.

The disc, one or more of which has an aperature in its perimeter the other having a projection or projections from its perimeter, intersect in a timed sequence so as to receive or produce power or to transfer liguids or gases.